Also keep in mind that it's not like Firefox was a hotbed of crazy contributions where your work would be easily identifiable and draw unwanted attention. The difference in the age of the contributor makes that even less likely. ~~~ rgoulter > Also keep in mind that it's not like Firefox was a hotbed of crazy > contributions where your work would be easily identifiable and draw unwanted > attention. The difference in the age of the contributor makes that even less > likely. The IMO most likely reason the contributor is male, and they're over 35 (I'm not exactly sure), is that they're further up the age pyramid than most contributors: while the bulk of Firefox's contributors are younger than 35, I imagine that it's most of the women in that age category who are most likely
