GIMP GIMP (GNU Image Manipulation Program) is an excellent image manipulation program that also supports vector and raster images. Unlike Photoshop, which uses a proprietary file format, GIMP uses the popular GNU Libre-office based file format,, GIF, which is similar to Photoshop's file format. It is free software that is part of the GNU system and is used in Linux, Solaris, and FreeBSD. GIMP features four image-editing modes: raster (bitmap), vector, painting, and pattern. Raster images can be transformed into a grid; you can scale, rotate, and distort; and you can perform filters such as blur, sharpen, contrast, and so on. Vector images are based on mathematical formulas and can be resized, rotated, and moved. GIMP can also open and save various other formats, including those created by vector-based programs. You can combine layers into an image, edit each individual layer, and create new layers. Layers are kept in separate windows, so there is no need to deal with multiple images in one window. You can also paint using layers, making it a great way to work with color. GIMP's interface provides the same keyboard commands used in Photoshop, and GIMP uses the same file format. In addition, GIMP provides a smaller user interface with a top menu bar, which is easier to read and follow than the large gray menu-bar boxes in Photoshop.

Q: Generate an array of Strings that contains all possible combinations of a parent array of Strings I want to create an array of strings, given a parent array, that contains all possible combinations of the elements of that parent array. For example, if the parent array is ["a", "b", "c"], the resulting array should be ["a", "b", "c"], ["a", "b"], ["a", "c"], ["a", "b", "c"], ["a", "b, c"], ["a", "b, c, d"], ["a", "b, c, d"], ["a", "b", "c, d"], ["a", "b, c", "d"] and so on (also with or without repeated elements). Is there any way to do this in one go, or do I need to make two passes, first to expand the list of strings into combinations, and second to then remove duplicates? Thanks! A: You could use combinations function of itertools: from itertools import combinations $co = ["a", "b", "c"]$ $v = ["a", "b", "c", "d"]$ $c = combinations(co, 2)$ $v = list(set(v))$ $v = list(set(x))$ possibilities = list(set(v)) the Model for Human Disease database (, build September 2015) and an in-house blast database of all S. aureus genes. Author contributions. ANR, CHS, AP and JB conceived and designed the study.
