Staphylococcus aureus is a common pathogen and a major public health concern. This study was conducted to assess the prevalence of S. aureus in clinical specimens of outpatients in Beijing, China. From September 2001 to August 2002, 386 non-repeated S. aureus isolates were collected from clinical specimens of patients visiting eight different clinical units in six hospitals of Beijing. Isolates were identified by conventional biochemical analysis and an automated system (MicroScan, Dade Behring). Antibiotic susceptibilities were determined by the disk diffusion method. Of the 386 S. aureus strains, 236 (60.70%) were methicillin-susceptible (MSSA) and 150 (39.30%) were methicillin-resistant (MRSA). The detection rate of S. aureus carriage was found to be 60.70% (236/386). MRSA has gradually become the predominant form of S. aureus in China. This situation is becoming more serious in Beijing than in any other Chinese city.D 1cb139a0ed
