Thanks to a dozen concealed-camera videos provided to The Washington Post, an ugly reality has come to light that previously had been kept secret from the media, the U.S. government and the public: The North Koreans are imprisoning and torturing defector family members. Housed in a small two-bedroom building made of concrete and steel, the family's cramped space is adjacent to other North Korean defectors living on the same street, who have close-ups of the guards. And it's across the street from the apartment where the family spent its first night in Pyongyang, where North Korean officials took it upon themselves to give the defector family $2,000 in cash and send a letter to the defectors' relatives in the South Korean town where the family lives. From left: Rosie, Dami, Rosa, Kim Jin-myong, Kim Hye-jin and Kim Yoon-mi. (Melissa Lee/The Washington Post) Read the most recent updates to this article here. North Korea says the family's actions were intended to undermine its efforts to bring home U.S. citizens. The U.S. State Department declined to comment. In several videos, the family's leaders — including Rosa Rosa's parents and sister — can be seen in their shabby apartment, inside which is a small bed and a few simple
