Europlusplus Angielski Z Cambridge Extra Edition Pl keygenUK Labour party picks up enough seats to form a government with the help of a small 'wedge' Election night was all about Labour's return to government for the first time in more than a decade, following a victory which many had doubted, writes Jonathan Kayser. This morning, with the longest and arguably least entertaining general election campaign in living memory finally over, Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn is on course to return to Downing Street for the first time since 2010. Because the UK is ruled by a weak coalition of Conservatives and Liberal Democrats, and the Labour party has enough seats to form a single-party government, any party can win a general election under the current parliamentary rules. When the results of the election came in this morning, just before 10.30pm, the Conservative party had been wiped out and replaced by a new group of 200 MPs who will form a 'progressive alliance' with the DUP (Democratic Unionist Party, the far-right political party which props up the Tories in the Northern Ireland Assembly), and around 40 Liberal Democrats. This is the 'wedge' that the SNP have spoken about - the notion that an outright majority for the SNP would see Labour refuse to continue to work with them on the one hand, while the DUP and SDLP would demand the same from the Tories. Labour has insisted that its election victory wasn't about who the DUP and the Conservatives can kick into the street, but rather that, despite the death of the Conservative party, there was a clear mandate for change and a Green Party with Greens performing well in the election. Jeremy Corbyn is on course to return to Downing Street for the first time since 2010 The small 'wedge' the party may find itself in next May will rely on the 'confidence and supply' arrangement between the DUP and the Conservatives. This is the notion that the government will govern on the basis that they have three main allies - the Conservatives and the DUP in Northern Ireland, the DUP in Ulster, and the far-right New Zealand Nationalists in a country they're trying to win over for global trade deals. To achieve a decent result in Wales and Scotland, the Conservatives have agreed to sign up to a series of measures that will protect 3e33713323
