Does not have a.exe suffix.Q: Create a VB.net program that takes a credit card number from user I am creating a VB.net project that requires the user to enter credit card details into a form and save the information for later use. My question is, what is the most simple way to take the credit card number from the user? Will read-only textboxes be safe enough or should I implement a method that checks for the correct digits in the number? A: If you do not need to validate anything, just use a TextBox. You will not need to check for the correct digits because the characters are entered by the user and in any case they have no meaning. However, you could add validation checking, for example, the length of the number or that it uses the right format. If you need to restrict the user to enter only certain characters, use a MaskedTextBox Topical clonidine, an alpha 2 agonist, reduces 3e33713323
