When I try to run the script nothing happens. Should I have any extension on my R Script. If so how do I get around it. I am not an expert on R, so any help would be appreciated. A: The problem is your use of the for loop. The `do.call( rbind.fill, lapply(myData, function(x){ ...stuff...})` This is all done before you define your function. By that time, inside your function `lapply` has already pulled the data into memory in the form of a matrix. And, as a result, the second line of your function, `length(x)` No longer applies! In this respect, for loop in R is the same as the loop in C: they both work on the entire input data, while R functions are defined to only work on the subset of input data that was passed into the function at the time the function was defined. However, you can do something about this using `expand.grid`. The syntax is: `expand.grid(x=A, y=B)` and it has an important consequence: `expand.grid` will convert `x` and `y` to vectors so that you can pass the two vectors into your function, and the result returned by your function will contain a matrix in which every row represents one observation in A and one in B, rather than an object with an attribute called A and an attribute called B that are both vectors of length one. Here is a complete example of what you posted, with `expand.grid` instead of `lapply`: `myData`

Q1: How to fix it? Q2: How to import the data into sql? Q3: It's seem that replacing "\r" with " " is ok. Is there some other better way to solve this problem? A:

Your code contains a mix of tabs and spaces.

Assuming you have Vim set to use tabs, this will cause it to automatically switch to using spaces instead of tabs for indentation: if '1' =~# s:old_wrap_compile
