A small, very convenient utility. It's quite easy to use. The interface is quite simple and easy to use, a simple drag-n-drop of files into the window is enough to start the splitting process. In the main window you have a left panel with a list of files and a right panel with a sidebar containing several tabs, most of them are used to specify the duration of a piece, the main tab is used to enter the duration, the file list is being updated automatically, the playlist is also being updated. The main panel and the sidebar can be removed if you don't want them on the screen, it can be a quite useful feature when splitting lots of files. The source file is represented by a red lamp to the left, by a blue lamp to the right, when you click on the lamp it's split or merged immediately. The main frame contains: - a left column with filename list - the sidebar that contains a specified number of tabs, each of the tabs contains a description of some parameters of the file that you want to split/merge - a right column with a number of split/merged items You can use the following tab buttons: - split a file - merge a file - edit duration - cancel You can use the following panels in the left side: - name of the file - the size - the type - the last modification date - the time of the last modification - a checkbox to deselect the file (checkboxes are used to select/deselect a group of files) You can use the following panels in the sidebar: - name of the file - the type - the last modification date - the time of the last modification - if you selected the file, a checkbox to deselect the file You can use the following tabs in the sidebar: - display duration - start - end - start offset - end offset - offset - source file You can also use the following button: - add - remove You can use the following columns in the main window: - file name - type (audio/video) - start time (specified by milliseconds) - duration (specified by milliseconds) - offset (specified by the number of seconds) - source file (normalized path) You can also use the following buttons: - cut - delete - paste - rename
