This is a new, revised edition of the classic Schultz, Sydney Ellen Schultz, et al. Tommy Robinson met his match on Friday. While the contempt of court case he has faced since a reporting trip he paid for in 2016 is winding its way through the UK's courts, the man he fought against, the activist journalist Katie Hopkins, continues to rile the nation with her activism and populist rhetoric, particularly towards Muslims. Earlier this month Hopkins appeared on LBC radio and again was outraged by Robinson's reporting – on separate topics, of course – and spoke of Robinson's ability to “stain an entire race” by saying his reports are viewed as “far worse than white privilege”. The effect of this allegation was such that a Daily Mail article appeared with the headline “Donald Trump's Milo has stained an entire race by his views”, referring to the US president's decision to use the term “globalists” to reference the establishment. This is in keeping with Hopkins' entire narrative of Robinson, who she considers a “fool”, and many in the British media in general, who she views as too gutless to call out hate speech. She has previously called him “pathetic” for making “appalling” comments about Muslims and has promised to drive him “crazy”. As I first pointed out in February, Robinson is now likely to have a psychological illness on top of the legal case he has faced. This is because Hopkins and the media and a few politicians have successfully demonised him and presented his views as inherently dangerous and toxic to the British people. This is the case despite his criminal conviction and imprisonment for an explicit political act not being relevant 82138339de
