The start of the English-language life of Indian jai . Why not just play the game and not take the opportunity to "second guess" things or to create mental arguments about something that has already taken place? Why is it so much to do with "our feelings" or "our notions" or "your notions". I just want to know, does a certain percentage of casual users get pissed off by a game that tries to be humorous and creative? And it being said, I would hate for people to be shut out because it's not "our type of game", or "your type of game", or "his/her type of game" and on and on... I just want to know, does a certain percentage of casual users get pissed off by a game that tries to be humorous and creative? And it being said, I would hate for people to be shut out because it's not "our type of game", or "your type of game", or "his/her type of game" and on and on... The issue that the word "power" raises for the anti-MMO crowd is important to sort out. The reaction to Power is "another 'new' sandbox/pick up and play thing" whereas with other games (like the WoW clone City of Heroes), the reaction to other games is "yet another RPG". I don't think that this is a good thing to do, and I personally don't think that targeting a specific audience with the message that "we're different" is a good thing. I mean, I know that I don't seem to have it in me to use words like "hate" or "bigot" or "idiot" or "stupid", but, in the context of a niche game, I reserve the right to call f30f4ceada
