List HD. Hit New Year Movie #1, Fights Over Indian Film Industry, Joy. When you take up the trade of a "profession" you generally need to be equipped with "properly addressed" equipment. Of course the old jargon we've used for decades is "credentials." Just last week I received a letter from a professor and asked to respond to a job opportunity. I pulled out my well-worn resume which stated I was a male but had completed a 5-year degree program in Computer Science. My letter to the professor read thus: Dear Professor Jones, I am seeking employment in your class, and I am currently working towards my Master's degree. As I explained in my letter to you of September 15, 2006, I am a male, and I have completed a 5-year undergraduate degree and a 5-year post-graduate degree in Computer Science. Please give me credit for my experience in all of my qualifications. So why am I sharing my credentials with you here? In your letter you requested some credentials regarding my ability to assist your students as a graduate teaching assistant in your class. You've kindly requested that I send you my credentials, and I've complied, as I understand them to be appropriate. I understand that I need to be properly addressed, and I always have been. But this is a request to which I have been entitled. The purpose of my letter of September 15
