Numerous publications, patents and patent applications are cited throughout the specification in order to describe the state of the art to which this invention pertains. Each of these citations is incorporated herein by reference as though set forth in full. Noroviruses (NoV) are members of the newly proposed genus, Caliciviridae, in the Caliciviridae family, and have been considered as agents of foodborne gastroenteritis for at least 50 years (Blom T, Schouls J. Noroviruses. In: Caliciviridae, Fields Virology, Fields and Knipe, eds. 9. Lippincott Williams & Wilkins, Philadelphia, Pa., pp. 1709-1732, 1995; Blyth M, Pullen A, Evans S. Empirically based public health policy for a calicivirus, Norovirus GII. Infect Dis Clin North Am 1999; 13:517-529). While the NoV genome is similar in general organization to that of the other caliciviruses, such as human enteric caliciviruses, human and animal NoV can be further divided into at least three distinct genogroups (AG I-III). Norovirus genomes are approximately 7500 nt in length, have a 5′ nontranslated region (NTR), a 3′ NTR, and contain a single open reading frame (ORF) flanked by 5′ and 3′ NTRs. The 5′ NTR is 200-300 nt in length and is important for the initiation of both viral RNA translation and replication. The 3′ NTR, approximately 300-500 nt in length, is also important in replication, and in turn, is used as a primer in reverse transcription of the genomic plus-sense viral RNA. The coding region of the ORF (ORF1) encodes a viral nonstructural polyprotein, while the ORF2 encodes a capsid protein. Human NoVs have been found to be the causative agents of sporadic acute gastroenteritis in children, young adults and immunocompromised individuals, as well as foodborne epidemic gastroenteritis, including winter vomiting disease and Norwalk-like viruses (NLVs) that are transmitted in a faecally contaminated food chain. Two NoV genotypes, genogroup I (GI, formerly GI.1) and genogroup II (GII), have been found to predominate

What's New In?

Antiangiogenic activity of the cyclooxygenase-2 inhibitor, meloxicam, by downregulation of proangiogenic factors in cancer. Cyclooxygenase (COX)-2, an important mediator of proangiogenic prostaglandins, is overexpressed in several cancers. The COX-2 selective nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID), meloxicam, is the first drug in a new class of NSAIDs that has demonstrated significant antitumor activity in human cancer xenografts. The goal of the current studies was to identify how the selective COX-2 inhibitor, meloxicam, reduces tumor growth and metastasis. As angiogenesis is a central event in cancer growth, we assessed whether the antiangiogenic actions of meloxicam were mediated by inhibition of COX-2 or by reduction in angiogenic factors. Meloxicam reduced the growth of endothelial (EC)-derived tumors by decreasing both the number of blood vessels and the number of proliferating ECs in tumors. Meloxicam treatment reduced vascular endothelial growth factor and fibroblast growth factor-2 in murine breast cancer 4T1 cells and human breast cancer MDA-MB-231 cells. In addition, mRNA levels of VEGF-A were inhibited by meloxicam treatment of tumor cells in vitro. Downregulation of angiogenic factors by meloxicam in breast cancer cells in culture was mediated by upregulation of the E3-ligase, Cbl-b, which targets VEGF-A for degradation. These results suggest that meloxicam inhibits breast cancer growth by inhibiting VEGF-A production and tumor angiogenesis. The first to test the more powerful Windows 11 operating system is one of the world's leading tech companies, Apple. In a relatively small, but nevertheless significant move, Apple has agreed to give Microsoft's new operating system a trial. Apple Chairman Steve Jobs confirmed that the company will use the new system in its forthcoming OS X 10.9 Mavericks, but no other details are available at this point. The company has already made reference to Microsoft's new OS in its quarterly financials, in which it cites compatibility issues between the two operating systems. Advertising In that same document, Apple claims that when it comes to the mobile market, it has a "strong" relationship with Google and Android. The company doesn't like to comment on its relationship with rival operating systems
