What's New in the Photoshop CS6?

John Bertero, a former executive for Dell, believes much of the ad revenue the site pulls in could easily fall into the hands of its top two players, Facebook and Google, if the company is allowed to add targeted advertising. "They could potentially have a larger share of the ad revenue," Bertero told AllThingsD. "But you've got to ask yourself, why do they want to have more?" The company confirmed that it is working on adding ads, but has been playing coy about how much money it might earn. An increase in ads would change the calculus for both Facebook and Google, which have already offered the service through AdSense and DoubleClick. Ad revenue is expected to grow at a faster rate than many of the companies' other activities as the site continues to grow. Bertero said the idea of a pay-to-play Facebook was far from a new concept. The network already allowed advertisers to pay a higher placement for their ads to be front and center. "I've been saying for some time, that Facebook is going to have to find a way to have a revenue stream so they don't need to be reliant on their advertising," Bertero said. The FTC has been working with Facebook to address its privacy issues, but a Facebook representative said the company still has questions about how it is being regulated. Although the FTC is auditing Facebook's practices, Bertero said he's not convinced it will push through any changes that threaten its potential dominance. "There's really no reason to go after Facebook with so many other considerations going on," he said. "It would be incredibly difficult to change a culture that's so entrenched... It would take a revolution in the marketplace, one that I really don't think is coming." Within a given city, access to transportation modes and public transit systems are key determinants of the price of housing ([@bib0010]; [@bib0037]). In this regard, public transport options and active travel options are vital for reducing transportation emissions and costs, which vary greatly by means of the transport mode and for inter-city travel (e.g. train vs. car). In general, a carbon footprint of a trip or mode of transport is a function of the energy source, distance, and travel speed ([@bib0026]). As a result of the variation in factors, a detailed analysis of all aspects is needed to determine the most
