The United States Government could require companies, including yours, to share information about their customers with the US Intelligence Community, so-called Section 702. Under this section, the US Government can order companies to disclose the information they hold about the subscribers of certain services, such as email, web browsing, and phone calls, for the purpose of fighting terrorism. In addition, the FISA Court is the only judicial body capable of reviewing certain FISA applications, so-called FISA Court orders. In response to these facts, we have been asking the US Government to clarify their interpretation of the law, but unfortunately, the government has
