Cost-benefit analysis of clean cookstoves: economic outcomes and expected health care and productivity costs. The prevention of 5 million deaths annually worldwide could be achieved through the adoption and use of improved cookstoves, given their proven safety, effectiveness, and cost-effectiveness; more than 10 million of the 50 million families cooking with biomass fuel are in Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. This analysis investigates the potential health and economic benefits of the elimination of indoor air pollution from improved cookstoves through the reduction of morbidity and mortality and averted productivity costs. Results show that traditional wood and charcoal fuel is associated with a significant public health benefit at an annual average of 10,000 deaths from pneumonia and influenza and 7,000 from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, as well as achieving the Kyoto Protocol goals for several pollutants and for increased life expectancy for women in Asia. Savings to the public health system (in 2008 US$) in Asia per year were between US$22,000 and US$57,000 for the higher estimate, depending on the method of counting costs and benefits. Expected savings in the United States and Europe were estimated to be lower than these averages.

Q: Vim: search files, and then on each line remove the text, and then on each line replace the text I have two variables: $string - string I want to remove from files $dir - directories where files are (absolute paths) I have a search, which searches files for $string: :vimgrep /\%$string/ $dir Then I remove that text: :0dw Then replace that text: :s/$string//g But I need all of this to happen on each line in the file: :vimgrep /\%$string/ $dir:%norm!0dw But this will only replace the last occurrence of $string A: for current line in the buffer (:h :for) \%Vimgrep /\%$string/ $dir :norm!>V /\%$string/j Note: This will modify current line, so after :vimgrep return to normal mode and edit it. 6a5af4b4c

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an information-processing system, an information-processing apparatus, an information-processing method, and a computer-readable recording medium. More particularly, the present invention relates to an information-processing system configured to transmit digital data to an electronic device via a network, an information-processing apparatus, an information-processing method, and a computer-readable recording medium.

2. Description of the Related Art It is conventionally known that digital data, for example, images and audios, to be published online can be downloaded from a server device to an electronic device such as a mobile phone. For example, Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2007-140322 (JP 2007-140322 A) describes that information can be published by a server on a network and downloaded to an electronic device. JP 2007-140322 A describes that the server device transmits a URL (Uniform Resource Locator) address of image data to an electronic device for download, and the electronic device acquires the image data at the URL address and saves the image data in a memory area. In addition, JP 2007-140322 A describes that the electronic device acquires a content file including the URL address, a GUID (Globally Unique Identifier), or an ETag (Extended Trust Mark) from a server device, reads out the content file, and determines whether the content file is modified. If the content file is modified, the electronic device acquires the modified content file from the server device, and if it is not modified, the electronic device saves the content file in the memory area. However, in the case of the conventional art described above, when a server device transmits a plurality of content files to an electronic device, the electronic device has to acquire all the content files from the server device and save the acquired content files in a memory area for download. Thus, a communication line to the server device needs to be continuously maintained, thereby causing a problem in that a time
