Scan, index, and convert documents you already have or that you need to obtain. The best OCR tools can get away with almost any document you throw at them, but can they be a little sneaky? Can they displace the code in a document, change the layout, or even replace characters? Can they substitute a letter in a document for a different letter? Can they trick a person’s eyes, and with them trick a document scanner? Can they zap your paper documents and use text from a previous date? Can they steal your secrets, inject viruses, or hijack a web page? We will now discuss in detail how OmniPage works and how it can protect you from document fraud. OmniPage – How it Works The OmniPage OCR system works at the pixel level. The word “pixel” is used because a pixel is the smallest division of an image on a computer screen. An image is usually made up of pixels, and pixels are grouped together to form characters. It is these characters that the OmniPage OCR system breaks down and extracts from each document. The ability of this system to extract text depends on its ability to overcome the unpredictability of an individual document. For example, if the document was handwritten and the reader was new to the content of the document, it could lead to confusion when there was a change in handwriting or formatting. In some cases, the system can guess when a stroke is a circle or a square
