You can check the details of the method using following article : [Effects of multi-drug therapy on platelet coagulation system and CD14 gene polymorphism of Chinese children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia]. To study the effects of multi-drug therapy (MT) on platelet coagulation system and CD14 gene polymorphism of Chinese children with acute lymphoblastic leukemia (ALL). The CD14 genotyping method was used to detect the presence of the CD14 gene polymorphism in 57 patients with ALL, 59 children in MT group and 62 in the control group. The activity of platelet coagulation system, including the activities of plasma fibrinogen, thrombin time (TT) and activated partial thromboplastin time (APTT), the levels of platelet factors (PF), and plasma interleukin-1 (IL-1), and the count of plasma neutrophils were measured before and after treatment. The CD14 gene polymorphism was found in these groups. The CD14 allele frequencies were not significantly different between ALL and the control group ($P > 0.05$), and neither were the activities of platelet coagulation system ($P > 0.05$). The results of multi-drug therapy (MT) on platelet coagulation system of ALL children showed that the levels of platelet factor 4 (PF4) and IL-1 were significantly higher, and the activity of plasma fibrinogen and APTT was significantly lower than those before treatment (P Q: ASP.Net MVC form elements 570a42141b
