Two newly developed in vitro methods for mutation detection were applied to 10 DNA samples from von Willebrand's disease (VWD) patients homozygous for VWD allele types and 2 normal DNA samples. The methods include PCR amplification of the complete VWD domain of the von Willebrand factor (VWF) gene, followed by one of two distinct procedures: (1) direct sequence analysis of the amplified PCR products, or (2) in vitro site-directed mutagenesis and subsequent single strand conformation polymorphism (SSCP) analysis of the modified PCR products. The primary application of this methodology is for the systematic screening of the VWD domain of the VWF gene from individuals suspected of having mutations in the VWD domain. In addition, these methods are also useful for screening and detecting mutations in VWD-associated genes, such as the platelet glycoprotein Iba gene.
