- Quickly find and delete dupes in your computer - Delete multiple files at once - Display a tree list of all dupes found - Optional file content comparison and SHA-1 hash values calculation In this article we will present to you a new way of analyzing your Mac OS X backups (timestamped) on any external storage device such as an SSD or USB key and it is possible with a free Mac utility named ImageSnap. A Timestamped Backup: If you haven't already done so, now is the time to set up a time-stamped backup of your Mac OS X system. You can do this either on a Time Machine-based backup system such as the previous version of System Backup (or you can use Back In Time) or on an external media such as a FireWire device or an external SSD. Once you have done this, ImageSnap will analyze your system backups to locate your latest and/or most important backups and display them in a graphical tree-view, which is just great! ImageSnap: ImageSnap is a free Mac OS X app created by Dividio. It has a nice and elegant user interface and features various advanced options including: View backups in tree-view format Select up to 20 backups and display them in the image viewer Recursively search for duplicate backups Select only the most recent backups in a given folder Set the frequency of your backups View the backup paths of your backups Remove duplicates from your backups Integrate with the Time Machine application This article will focus on the first four options. You can find the list of all options by choosing the top menu entry called "Settings" then select "Backups" and then "View", then scroll down the list and click on the first entry. The settings menu opens and as you scroll down the list of all settings you can see the more detailed explanation of each option.
