[A case of intervertebral disc herniation with an unusual clinical course and a review of the literature]. We report a case of intervertebral disc herniation with a slow-progressive clinical course. A 63-year-old woman presented with symptoms of back pain and right leg numbness. Five years previously, she had undergone orthopedic surgery for a ligamentum flavum tear and lumbar decompression. On admission, plain radiographs of the lumbar spine showed a well-marginated, smoothly enhancing mass that herniated through the right side of the L5-S1 intervertebral disc on a T2-weighted magnetic resonance image. The patient was treated with bed rest and conservative therapy. However, her symptoms did not improve, and the mass eventually decreased in size. Although intervertebral disc herniation has been reported to be a self-limiting condition, our patient showed an unusual clinical course. Further investigation of the clinical course of this disease is necessary. Intestinal antigen-presenting cells are the main source of IL-5 production in Crohn's disease.
