Pregnancy and recovery from endometriosis can present an obstacle of sorts for people dealing with the condition, but there are ways around it -- that is, if you're willing to embrace it and go for it! One woman who made her dream of a child come true is wearing a heart-on-a-stylus (and she's not having it removed during labor). Megan is a patient at Mayo Clinic's division of Gynecologic Endocrinology and Reproductive Medicine in Scottsdale, Arizona, and she was diagnosed with endometriosis years ago. She didn't seek treatment until about four years ago, and the symptoms of her disease affected her everyday life -- she was unable to have sex and couldn't hold her young son without experiencing pain. Her husband, Mark, was struggling to help her through it. "Before, he just said, 'Okay, I'll do my best with this, and we'll get through it.'" Megan admits that Mark was kind enough to stay with her through it all, but it was during a trip to the hospital with her youngest son, Garen, that she came to the realization that there had to be a better solution. In order to conceive, you need to be in a place where your hormones are all doing what they're supposed to be doing. Megan and her husband, her disease and the way it was affecting her were all factors that made it difficult for them. Although she tried a variety of treatments, including hormone therapy, her symptoms persisted. So then she decided to try a new approach. Rather than focusing on improving her situation, she decided to do the opposite.

The impact of homocysteine levels on the severity and characteristics of ischaemic stroke: a review. High homocysteine level is associated with cardiovascular disease and risk of ischaemic stroke. It was suggested that homocysteine may be a causative rather than a non-causal risk factor in the pathogenesis of ischaemic stroke. This review of the literature was performed with the aim to quantify the strength of the association between homocysteine level and the severity and characteristics of ischaemic stroke. We searched MEDLINE, EMBASE and ICHUSSA databases from inception to September 2007 for relevant studies. We also hand searched several journals and conference proceedings. The research criteria included relevant studies of ischaemic stroke patients and subjects with homocysteine measurement as well as case-control and cohort study design. The quality of the studies was independently assessed by three reviewers using the Downs & Black criteria. The association between homocysteine and the severity and characteristics of ischaemic stroke was investigated in 16 studies. High plasma homocysteine level was associated with the severity (odds ratio [OR] = 1.88, 95% confidence interval [CI] 1.22-2.92), risk of early death (OR = 3.33, 95% CI 2.12-5.24), and risk of ischaemic stroke rec 3e33713323
