Figure 3.1: This file contains a variation of a photo of a camera and filters. This image is a variation of a photo of a camera and filters. This image was created using the default split screen editing mode, but it is more commonly known as Adobe Photoshop's Layers feature and allows you to manipulate and layer images with two windows. Photoshop comes with a collection of tools and filters that enable you to manipulate and enhance photos. Some tools are available to you right off the bat, while others require you to create a template to easily access them. NOTE You may see the color plate under the English menus as P, or the Cyrillic menu as PR. In all languages, the color plate is used to access filters, while the English menu is used to access image tools. In this chapter, you will learn how to use Photoshop's capabilities. Although you will learn each tool individually, it is important to remember that you can use multiple tools and layers together to make images more complex.

Characterization of the in vitro proteinase-pepsin digestion of human cartilage proteoglycan. To begin to define the microenvironmental factors that regulate the proteinase activity in articular cartilage, a pericellular inhibitory layer containing proteinase inhibitors was characterized in cartilage explant systems. Microsomal membranes from cultured rabbit chondrocytes and cartilage explants digested a radiolabeled human cartilage proteoglycan core protein in a similar manner. The protein was maximally degraded at pH 8.5 and lost 85% of the radiolabel after a 30-min incubation. Endogenous inhibitors were partially removed from the membrane-digest product using heparin affinity chromatography. Sequential heparin removal and proteinase degradation products were characterized using sodium dodecyl sulfate-polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis. Although the major proteinase that degraded the core protein was a membrane protein of about 100 kDa, a low-molecular-mass proteinase also participated in degradation of the core protein. This proteinase exhibited the same affinity for heparin as the membrane proteinase and could be partially separated from the 100-kDa proteinase using heparin affinity chromatography. When the released core protein was treated with pepsin, a major fragmentation occurred at a site about 110 amino acid residues from the carboxyl end of the molecule. This site coincided with the pepsin-sensitive site identified in the proteinase-digested core protein of <sup>125</sup>I-labeled human cartilage proteoglycan, and may be involved in the initiation of the proteolysis. These studies demonstrate that an intracellular membrane-associated proteinase rapidly degrades human cartilage proteoglycan in cartilage explant systems. REUTERS/Bobby Yip HONG KONG (Reuters) - A Hong Kong court has convicted a woman of using under-age tattoo parlors to tattoo the models for a handful of topless photos without permission in return for money, police said on Thursday. The photos were to have gone on to become a calendar. The verdict follows the July arrest of five alleged members of a gang of street tattoo artists in the Chinese city of Guangzhou on charges similar to those laid against the woman, who was not named.
