Can you confirm that the database and the database builder are set to the same table settings? The error message suggests that you have your query incorrectly set up. You need to close the parenthesis of your where clause, add the colon to the start of your JOIN statement and add parenthesis around the ON clause. Title: 3D SEXVILLA 2.0 the klub v9.1 Content Full Surprisegolkes"She just wanted to be heard," Mary Wilson said. "I really think all of us are guilty of not listening. "She has a new mission for all of us." Wilson added: "I feel like it's time for all of us to start listening." Wilson's comments come shortly before a planned demonstration by the Black Lives Matter organization outside the White House to rally for justice for the San Bernardino, California, victims. Another group, Faithful To Justice, also plans to hold a press conference at 1 p.m. In lieu of flowers, the family requests that donations be made to the USO or the USO Wounded Warrior Project.Q: Create file handle with the same name as file? I have some code that creates a file, saves some data to it, then closes it. At a later point, if the data has been changed, I want to open the file again and compare the data to what is written in the file. It is my understanding that when I open a file with fopen(), it re-opens the file even if the name has already been used. This means that I have to open the file by its actual name, or else I end up comparing the data saved to the data already in the file. This is my code (I only want to point out the relevant parts): FILE *file = fopen("file.dat", "a+"); fwrite(&some_var, sizeof(some_var), 1, file); fclose(file); if ( (some_type) == get_data() ) fopen("file.dat", "r"); // This line fails! fopen() already in use fread(&some_var, sizeof(some_var), 1, file); I have tried using flock() to ensure no other processes are writing to the file before I open it, but the error persists. A: The problem is that you are trying to open the file with the exact same name twice. fopen will open a file with that name for you once, so opening it again is just overwriting the first file with the second file.
