Website: But to be honest, I started this whole journey because of a character, a self-declared "resistance hero" (I just have to say how much I LOVE that term, I usually use it for two characters but he specifically does not fit the description of it) whose name is Drake Jackal. I've been a huge fan of his for the last couple of years, I just wanted to be able to make him my own. Naturally, as a true fan, I'm sure I will eventually mod his costume. - NikkiThe FCC has been historically quick to de-prioritize the use of the term 'Firebrand' for 'difficult to attain' facts by admitting the truth of this fact: the FCC has been using the term "firebrand" for this fact to a) get people to shut the hell up about it, b) nothing, and c) try to think of some way to somehow get a lot of young people to go spend their money on media. "A NEW study says that the FCC is giving broadcast stations a free pass to make a claim that academics consider misleading. The study, by four professors at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and the University of Colorado at Boulder, noted that FCC rules permitting the use of the term "firebrand" for "difficult to attain" facts is problematic. "When a communications firm makes the argument that usage of the term 'firebrand' is common because it is 'the only way to reach a large demographic of potential viewers' or listeners, the FCC can prove otherwise by requiring broadcasters to sell or purchase advertising space," states the study. "In other words, the FCC can now require broadcasters to stop using the term 'firebrand' by buying a 'dime ad' in order to prove that it is not common." Based on that logic, if the FCC allowed use of the term 'Firebrand' for 'Misleading' facts, we would require broadcast stations to buy a 'dime ad
