Treatment of overhanging restorations with a self-etch adhesive: in vitro and clinical evaluation. This in vitro and in vivo study tested the null hypothesis that there is no difference between a self-etch adhesive used on a natural enamel and cementum and an acid-etch adhesive used on enamel and cementum in overhanging restorations. Overhanging restorations were prepared from extracted human third molars. Ten teeth were used for each group. The test groups were: self-etching adhesive (Clearfil SE Bond); acid-etching adhesive (Clearfil S3 Bond); and no adhesive (control). All the preparations were made in enamel and cementum for 12 min on each surface and composite resin was polymerized on the enamel. After storage in saline at 37 degrees C for 24 h, the bond strength was tested using an Instron machine (450kN) and fracture mode was evaluated under a stereomicroscope. The data was statistically analyzed using analysis of variance and the Tukey test. All the self-etching adhesives achieved significantly higher bond strength than those with no adhesive (P<0.05).

“It’s about time!” “My old Dad’s dirty joke.” “We’re just taking a break.” It’s a revelation. All of us have been made to feel like dirt by one person or another. We can’t necessarily escape it. But many of us survive it and move on, perhaps opening doors that we never would have otherwise. “It’s not you, it’s me.” It’s not that simple. Our mind is a battlefield, and we’ve all been invited to a battle royale. At the centre of that field is
