Field of the Invention The invention relates to a beverage processing apparatus which is capable of producing hot or cold beverages and storing them in a separate drink container. B. Related Art During the years of the 1970s, the proliferation of coffee shops and convenience stores allowed a great number of people to begin to experiment with coffee drinking. Most people who do not drink coffee find that they enjoy the flavor and aroma of hot coffee. However, getting hot coffee at home or on the road is difficult. There have been many efforts to develop electric coffee makers which can be heated when needed and stored in the freezer. However, they still require time to reheat before they can be used. Recently, there have been refrigerated and heated carafes which provide beverage heating and chilling devices that can be loaded with water and coffee and, by using a timer, can provide hot or cold beverages. There have also been refrigerated and heated carafes with insulated devices to keep coffee in a heated condition. In addition, there are also pre-programmed models. This invention provides beverages in a dual state, as hot or cold, stored in a single drink container with a reservoir and also provides a means for heating the beverage and/or chilling it. The temperature is adjustable at any desired level and the apparatus is easy to use. When it is desired to heat the beverage, the reservoir water is heated and the beverage is either added to the reservoir or stored in an insulated container prior to heating. When it is desired to cool the beverage, the heater will be activated and cold water will be run through the reservoir and heated to the desired level. A reverse cycle can be used for cooling.Sooo…got a chance to get back to my wits to create something that's been need for a while! It's a little demon buster/battle icon, so it's simple and fast to make. Wanted to share this cute little bottlebrush, or better known as the flower brush.
