Congenital ichthyoses are a heterogeneous group of inherited disorders that affect the skin and other tissues. Mutations in the gene encoding aquaporin 5 have been shown to cause ichthyosis bullosa of Siemens (erythroderma neonatorum congenita with ichthyosis). In this study, we have used a combination of direct sequencing and fluorescent microsphere hybridization assays to screen 18 Australian families with congenital ichthyosis for mutations in this gene. A single mutation, a G > A transition at position 3425 of the gene, was identified in the affected individuals from one of the families. The mutation results in a leucine to isoleucine substitution and is absent in 100 control chromosomes. Our results indicate that mutations in aquaporin 5 are a rare cause of congenital ichthyosis, but that screening this gene will not completely exclude the possibility of mutations in other ichthyosis genes.
