I have a problem when loading some webpages the webview scrolls to the left to show the "Load more" button, how can I prevent this? I'm using an ActionBar, so it's not like I have access to stop the scrolling. I would love to use html anchors to keep the webpage fixed (on the same position), but I can't find something like that in android - any ideas? A: An answer is currently pending for a "close request" (the closing has already been done). The close request is marked [status=declined] so we haven't missed a closing for it yet. It's something that's "easy" to do and I intend to release a version with this ability once it's closed. UPDATE: The feature is now included in 3.5.0-SNAPSHOT, so this proposal should be implemented now, pending approval by either maintenance or the relevant team (there isn't a lot of activity on it either...), Determining factors in attention bias for threat in a post-9/11 world. The current study examined biases in attention for threat following the events of September 11, 2001 (9/11) and the start of the Iraq War in March 2003. It used stimuli depicting photographs of airplanes, weapons, and images of dead people, and varied the perceived salience of threat by varying the time that had elapsed since 9/11. Participants in the Time, Location, or both conditions viewed a series of stimuli, and were instructed to try to identify targets (e.g. a photograph of a "Toyota Corolla") that would be difficult to find in an environment in which there were many other stimuli. The results supported the hypothesis that recognition memory performance will be poorer if threat stimuli are presented in the immediate aftermath of exposure to threat as compared to a delayed presentation condition. These findings have implications for researchers who use self-report and laboratory-based measures of threat-related cognitive biases in survivors of disasters./// Generated by class-dump 3.5 (64 bit) (Debug

Normally the Elecard MPEG-2 PlugIn for WMP program is to be found in the . a feeling of constant desperation, restlessness. You can never be sure you're doing it right, that it's doing enough, that you aren't forgetting a vital ingredient or aren't going about things the wrong way. So much of it is trial and error, but you can't fail to your detriment because there is no substitute for that. How did you finally find your way? I was on a path that I didn't want to be on. I didn't know where I was going and I was scared. There were moments of great joy as things started to work out, but a lot of them were also really painful. We all knew that we were going to be out of work after the festival ended and that was going to be our real test. We had a strong core team and an amazing crew. We knew what we were doing, but we were also very young, inexperienced, because we didn't have much money. We didn't have anything. We kept changing it up and this is where I learned the most. I had to give this huge push and resistance to what I thought I wanted to do and what other people thought I should do. You can't work on things that don't resonate. You have to be able to listen to what other people are saying and from your gut, be able to pick out what the important message is. And then you have to be brave enough to do it. I learned so much more about myself as a person, about how I work, what I'm made of, who I really am. And I think I achieved what I set out to do with that, which was to help keep a process of making a film. It wasn't about picking up the camera and selling the film, it was about doing it and getting it out of me. And that's what I think is the most vital thing, and that's what I need to keep doing. Can you describe what you feel like when you finally get a film finished? It's a massive sense of relief. You don't really know what it's like until you actually see it. It can be a great sense of satisfaction, even though there is a lot of work behind it. There's a feeling of pride in the end result
