• The Adjustment Program (also referred to as the "Non-Printing Add-On" or the "Waste Ink Pad" Cousins can't replicate funny facial expressions and body language they've gotten used to By: Gwyneth Doland | Published: November 4, 2017 "Cousins cannot be admitted to." That's the message from the American Academy of Neurological Sciences (AANS) advisory committee. The organization is recommending that the epilepsy gene, known as EPM2A, be prohibited from use by some genetic testing laboratories. The committee's concern is that the gene has a high false-positive rate and is considered a "low-frequency pathogenic variant," meaning it should be tested only in cases where it's known to be the cause of the disease. "The committee finds that individuals diagnosed with this condition do not have a high likelihood of serious intellectual, medical, or other difficulties and that use of [the EPM2A gene] by laboratories would not provide clinically meaningful information for the diagnosis or management of the condition." This new action was first reported in October 2017, but it's gaining traction this month as the AANS committee has been at work for about a month now. Tracking the story and the opinions expressed by people on both sides is fascinating. One side of the story People who have been diagnosed with epilepsy or a family member with epilepsy have been disappointed to learn that they can't use the EPM2A test. The AANS advisory committee has been reaching out to them, attempting to explain the rationale for the recommendation. Here's what people are writing in response. "While I am not an epileptic, my friend has had a long battle with her epilepsy. "I can vouch for her having an even more difficult time than I can having a difficult time at all living with epilepsy. "I just got my results today. I too have a brother who has epilepsy and two cousins. "So I think anyone who has epilepsy should not be tested, and it's upsetting to hear that people have to wait to be tested for something that may have helped them. "I used to struggle with depression and anxiety but it's a great d0c515b9f4

Among other things, it pointed out that while it was true that the Bureau had in the past requested that the plaintiffs meet at certain times, it was not normally the Bureau's practice to require "employees to report to work at the exact time the Bureau sets. The Bureau's practice is to leave flexibility in the scheduling of the employees so that if the employees cannot work the time the Bureau sets, the Bureau does not arbitrarily terminate them." (U.S. Mot. at 12.) Further, the Bureau stated that it normally had difficulty working with the NYIF because it was not willing to work with the plaintiffs together. (Id.) The Bureau concluded that these two factors constituted grounds for the terminations. Upon consideration of the defendants' motion for summary judgment and plaintiff's cross-motion for summary judgment, the Court concludes that the defendants have articulated legitimate, non-discriminatory reasons for the terminations. In light of the NYIF's "inflexible, time-consuming and often needlessly rigid regulatory system [and] its refusal to work with the Bureau," (Eagle, 2002 WL 31412470 at *3), the Bureau justifiably and reasonably could believe that leaving flexibility in scheduling within the Bureau was important to meeting its obligations to the NYIF. This conclusion is supported by the affidavits of two Bureau employees stating that the NYIF's lack of flexibility frequently caused the Bureau employees to "356 work outside their designated time and that this lack of flexibility was contrary to the Bureau's normal practice. Moreover, although the NYIF had indicated its intention to continue investigating and prosecuting claims against the City, that investigation and prosecution were never commenced and thus the NYIF's policy of not working with the Bureau was never tested. While the NYIF's actions may have been well-intentioned, the NYIF's refusal to work
