This new technology also expands the player movement system in FIFA 20. As a result, player ball control and ball movement feel more realistic. Player speed and acceleration are now adjusted based on your acceleration profile. This is all powered by a new player intelligence engine, which learns from your every real-life training session, along with the feedback and data collected from 'live' gameplay. FIFA 20 may have been a big hit, but we knew it wasn't perfect. We want FIFA to be more than just a video game. It's a sport for many, and with this in mind, we've updated the Real Player Motion Model (RPM) in an effort to deliver a more authentic simulation of what the sport should be. FIFA 20 had a new player intelligence engine, which had an instant and significant improvement over FIFA 18. The new RPM included new, highly tuned model components, including the muscle fibres, tendons and joints that enable our athlete to move with more realism. With the latest Evolution of Player Intelligence engine FIFA has a new range of player tactics, such as sprinting towards goal, sliding from the tackle and any other special movements that are critical in a football match. Today we are pleased to share some of the top player inspired moments from our "Live Events" - Test Windows and our exciting planned content. But how will 'hypermotion technology' work in practice? Having covered the latest FIFA 20 features, you may wonder how it impacts "Hypermotion." How will it adjust the player speed and movement to ensure that players feel like they're playing a true-to-life football match? This is a question we'd like to address - more on that soon. But for now, we'd like to start with a quick note for those of you looking for the full details on the new FIFA 22 features. We have an extensive video out now, which has the technical details and videos on all the new features in FIFA 22. Beyond FIFA 22, we've spoken a little more about how the technology will impact on the gameplay in FIFA 20. We hope it answers some questions you may have. Here's a summary of the key changes FIFA 20 will make - just by looking at some of the videos on YouTube we can see the

Features Key:

- True football simulation perfected for the next generation – Powered by EA SPORTS' FIFA engine, which delivers unparalleled ball-movement and ball-control directly to the player.
 - "HyperMotion Technology" allows players to feel even more in-motion like the real players, and unlock a plethora of momentum-based gameplay for unique opportunities and momentum-based skill moves.
 - Career mode sees true creators of football get the chance to play their way to the top, and even customize their name and logo. It's the best soccer experience in the world – both on the pitch and in the manager's office.
 - New "Young Stars" attribute created specially for young players, which unlocks talents depending on your attributes. Recreate soccer legends with bigger-than-life skill moves using in-game reaction to animate and enhance player's skills.
 - FIFA Scout – This new feature enables users to choose what they prefer to watch out for, as they take on a role as a scout. Find the players that will rise to the top after assessing the crowds, club allegiance, and strategy of your opponents.
 - Matchday – Experience the emotions of a referee at every single moment of the match. Either choose to manage the team from the technical stands, or control each facet of the match at the matchday level. EA SPORTS added new detail and emotion to the way you manage your preparation and interactions with your staff. Every touch of the ball is captured and conveyed to you as decisions are made.

- Enjoy your preparations in a whole new way by viewing your team from behind the touchlines!
 - Create your dream team and customize your squad using existing players from more than 300 clubs. FIFA Ultimate Team Mode offers an exciting selection of enhancements including the launch of new third kit designs for clubs, and new players within those kits.
 - Multiplayer is being rebuilt with a brand new creative engine. New improved online game modes, including against EA SPORTS FIFA experience, and classic 2v2 modes will be available. With a revamped and enhanced online experience, party games with friends and family are back, with some new surprises in store.
 - FIFA Complete Pass provides a complete online tournament experience, designed to include
