Prepare yourself for a nostalgic trip back into gaming-in-the-90s. Featuring the hilarious voice acting of Chris Hardwick (The Nerdist, @midnight), Elo Hell is an episodic comedic strategy-RPG-with-e-sports set in a post-apocalyptic world in which you must live out your dream of becoming the ultimate videogame pro. There's a sci-fi twist to the original Starcraft, but with a serious amount of fun. As Chance Betzinger, you'll begin life as a likable, albeit dim high school senior. Gradually, you'll slowly discover your gaming skills as you play out a series of 10 episodes. You'll choose from 11 unique characters with all-new skills, moves, items and customizations. Choose your character's attributes carefully as these can be used to upgrade Chance's gamer profile, earn 'Coinz' and master the game. Only after mastering the Echo Star, which is 1/3 the depth of Starcraft, will you play the ultimate game of your life: Echo Star. In each episode you'll make important decisions, from your skill as a player to your relationship with your friends. Your choices are what shape Chance's gamer profile, including his trash talking skills, his voice talents, his fashion choices, his love life, and his general hype. Elo Hell is a funny story about loving video games and learning to be a good friend. Inspired by the classic two-cent coin, the "A-toz" stamping machine is a novel new piece of kitchen gadgetry for those who need to print either a quick stamp or a uniform and re-usable address label set. StampPad, the unique machine from the prolific inventor, Alfred J. Robitaille, Jr. who has a well-published library of patent-pending inventions, is making stamping easy. A unit of 16 stamps can be stored in the StampPad until needed. A "stamp selection" key pad allows you to choose from 16 available stamp sizes and face options. The stamps are stored in the StampPad's built-in chamber, making them easy to retrieve and restore. "The simple size makes it easy to carry on a purse or pocket or handbag. The fact that it's also a printing machine makes it easy to check and adjust forms." - Alfred J. Robitaille, Jr. Robitaille's StampPad is being rolled out in the United States

You Never Listen Game Description

You Never Listen is a unique, original board game that you play against a board generated by the game. You don't have any advice to give, or remember who you were who thought you were an important messenger. The messages you are thrown have you get out of your chair. The instructions are jumping from the stack and other bystanders are not able to help because you are never listening. In each board, you run to the green star to collect your standard messenger bag and use your pen to fill the bags each round. On the green star is the pile of question marks with the highest number of questions will blow up and you are asked to change the color of the piece on the board to get your bonus. Who will be the messenger who blows up and what life experience will
