India envisions that these centers would provide monitoring of performance, policy analysis, and evaluation. Scholarship in the South Asian region The increasing interest in Indian Higher Education in the South Asian region has been evidenced by the involvement of Universities in this region in the deliberations and activities of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation in which India is a member. A South Asian Universities Network (SAUN) has also been set up to foster cooperation between the universities in the SAARC region. The All India Council of Technical Education (AICTE) is one of the organizations which is contributing significantly to development of Higher Education in India. International co-operation India has recently been making efforts to expand its international collaborations. These collaborations have focused in particular on building collaborative research and academic partnerships, on quality development and on capacity building activities. These are likely to bring benefits both to India and to the other countries involved in the partnerships. Examples of these efforts include the following: a set of partners in the India-Vietnam Joint Education Programme was set up in the early 1990s with the help of UNESCO for capacity building activities, including the development of Vietnamese language and subject expertise among Vietnamese students in the Indian universities; India and the Republic of Korea formed a Joint Working Group to foster friendly relations and cooperation in education, which includes an agreement in 1992 to set up a joint extension center for Korea in India; a similar agreement was signed with the Republic of Maldives in 1995, for exchange of students and faculty members between the institutions of these two countries; a 'Strategic Partnership' was set up between the Science and Engineering Research Council of India and the Royal Society of London, for collaborative research projects between India and the UK; an agreement was signed in 1997 between the University Grants Commission (UGC) of India and the Australian National University
