all seems to be working fine except the fact that we are running into problems when we run the unit tests, and have to include the rubygems-specification in the gem file. We are wondering if there is an easier way to get Heroku to automatically update a gem by changing its version number or updating a 'requirement file'. For example, it would be nice to be able to just say 'update ' and it will automatically update the gem in the application. A: Heroku does not allow modification of your Gemfile via web interface or rake task. However, you can use Heroku cedar stack to have a separate build environment where you can modify Gemfile in a separate directory
