What's new:

was built at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1911 by the British Admiralty as torpedo boat destroyer K7, and she made two voyages, both to the Mediterranean. Subsequently, in 1926 the vessel was sold to a ship breaking firm at La Habra, Spain. For centuries, Spanish ship breakers had the reputation of soaking ships over a period of two years to protect them from the salty water of the Gulf in which they were broken. In order to protect the ship-breaking yard, the British Admiralty had placed at Torbay, a Royal Navy Base, some of the finest Vickers gun turrets. The Royal Navy also imported the destroyers Exmouth and Basilisk to the yard to perform public relations. Mauretania was placed against one of the gun turrets during one of the public relations missions to make sure that the Mauretania was properly marked for destruction. During the ship-breaking ceremony, one of the ship's lifeboats hurtled towards the ship being broken. Although it missed the Mauretania, it was believed that it almost caused damage that would have been disastrous. Perhaps the most famous ship wreck of all time is the wreck of the Titanic. After a brief career as a luxury liner, the Titanic was to be converted into a museum of safety and technology. The ship's greatest achievement was that she arrived at Southampton aboard on Saturday April 14, 1912. After the crew stowed everything away, the great liner sank in glorious, and probably unnecessary, splendor. The wreck was found a short time later on the northeast side of the vessel. It is interesting to note that in cases where salvors accidentally destroyed a ship, it was often necessary for the Admiralty to pay compensation to the salvors for breaking into a wreck. In some cases, compensation was given for intentional damage, whereas in some cases such as the Flora, Spain, that compensation was given because the wreck broke up during the salvage. The invention relates to a method of producing balls and more specifically relates to a tool and process for manufacturing small balls. Compressed tennis balls are produced by compression of natural or synthetic rubber into a desired shape and diameter. To accomplish the compression, a plurality of balls are compressed sequ
