Open Photoshop Elements, go to File > Open, and then choose the folder with your image files. In the next step, select your photo, and then go to Image > Image Size. You will see different options to resize your image. Now, you can change the look of your photo by using the different customization options. First, choose one of the predefined options, which will automatically set its own size. For example, if you want to resize the picture to 100% of the viewport, select "Set Size to 100%" from the viewport and then go to Image > Image Size. If you want to change the whole picture, go to Image > Image Size > Preset for Landscape. In this image, we will use the preset option, where you need to select the "Set Size to portrait or landscape" option, and adjust the picture accordingly. If you need more options, you can also edit your own size with the control icons. These are shown in the following image. In the left-hand corner of the control panel, you can see the size icon. With this icon, you can click once to make the size smaller or twice to make the size larger. Also, with the control icons at the bottom, you can zoom in and out, change the image quality, as well as select the different presets. The Control icon allows you to zoom in and out. You can now place these controls anywhere you want, as long as it is on the viewport. If you want to zoom in more, simply click the zooming icon. The second icon, the previewing icon, allows you to navigate through your images one by one and to edit them on the screen. The former University of Denver swimmer and newly minted cyclist was reportedly scheduled for a five-year hearing in March after committing a DUI in August. During the two-week time frame in between, Murray was active in the collegiate cycling community and the collegiate running community. Murray was a pioneer in his cycling club, the University of Colorado at Boulder Cycling Club. He was a key player in the Boulder Velodrome club, one of the largest collegiate cycling clubs in the United States, where he served as president. He had been president of the National Collegiate Cycling Association since 2012 and he was the 2012 NCAA cycling team coach of the year. In a statement, Murray said: "I am profoundly disappointed in what has occurred in the last two weeks. I have spent the last two weeks trying to clean up what I created and started and I have apologized to my family, and to those who have been affected by my actions. I regret that my mistake has created a negative ripple effect on my family and my friends, many of whom are cyclists, runners and athletes in general and many of whom I admire and respect. I am continuing to work hard at making amends for what I have done." Murray ended his statement with the hope that this would be the last "negative effect on my family and my friends." In a statement to USA TODAY Sports, Murray's agent, Larry Jones, said that Murray, a graduate of the Collegiate Cycling Club, "has had a misunderstanding with the University of Colorado and has withdrawn from all activities." Jones said that Murray will remain eligible for the team until the end of the school year. "He is fully aware of the alcohol policy and was very careful to follow the university guidelines regarding personal conduct," Jones said. "He is also being fully transparent and cooperative with the university, federal law enforcement authorities and other agencies as they proceed." The Denver school also released a statement on Monday about Murray: "We are aware of a situation and as it pertains to our student, we do not comment on any ongoing or potential legal matters." The 23-year-old Murray's road cycling club is called the AM-PM club and they team won the national championship in 2011. He was named the club's captain when he started at DU in 2013. In 2012, Murray was the national team captain. Murray competed for the team the following three years. Murray was an elite-level swimmer in college. He broke frozen_string_literal: true module Backports class Enhanced chlorine production from swine slurry by pretreating slurry with recycled activated carbon at different concentrations. Three experiments were conducted to investigate the potential of recycled activated carbon (RAC) for chlorination of swine slurry in the nitric/sulfuric acid sequence. The experiments were conducted with different RAC concentrations and different swine slurry:recycled activated carbon (SRAC) ratios. Results indicated that approximately 60% of total sulfide and 85% of total nitrogen were removed with RAC at a concentration of 1.0 g/L, while 90% of total sulfide and 100% of total nitrogen were removed with RAC at a concentration of 5.0 g/L. In addition, at a ratio of 1.0:1.0 for SRAC:swine slurry, approximately 100% of chlorination was achieved. However, approximately 50% of chlorination was achieved at a SRAC:swine slurry ratio of 1.5:1.0. Although results showed a clear positive effect on chlorination, additional measures may be required before commercialization of the technology to reduce ammonia levels in the swine slurry, and for sustainability issues.
