"We are Hearst Television, the first national channel for America to put the viewer first. Since 1968, as America's favorite source of local, national and international news and entertainment, we've been there for the ups and downs. "But with the passage of the Telecommunications Act and an advertising industry in transition, we have taken it upon ourselves to redefine what it means to be a national cable channel for the digital age. "No longer mere purveyors of news, we are taking the lead in telling the stories that matter to our viewers. That means developing original programming, such as 'Breaking News,' 'Nightly News' and 'World News,' which offer unparalleled local, national and international news sources. It means partnering with news organizations to provide the broadest range of in-depth, specialty programming to complement local news, from the latest in technology, science, business, sports, technology, and health to cooking shows, lifestyle shows, sitcoms, drama, and other forms of entertainment. It means delivering more specialized news on politics and policy, sports, entertainment and fashion, so our viewers can stay abreast of what's happening in the communities that they care about."Practical Issues in the Management of Polyuria and Polydipsia. Polyuria and polydipsia are common symptoms in which a wide variety of metabolic diseases can be responsible, from pure or secondary diabetes insipidus to multisystemic illnesses with hypercortisolism, hyperprolactinemia, and other causes. Although a subset of causes may resolve with normalization of plasma osmolality and correction of renal fluid overload, polyuria and polydipsia in the presence of endocrinopathy usually necessitate some form of endocrine-directed therapy. However, the necessity of active treatment is frequently overstated and is often accompanied by a cascade of inappropriate testing and intervention in the absence of patient symptoms or disease. Public perceptions of the prevalence and demographic distributions of uncircumcised adolescent males in the United States. A great deal of media coverage highlights the fact that uncircumcised (UC) males have an increased risk for sexually transmitted infections (STI) when compared with circumcised (MC) males, yet the prevalence of MC among adolescent males is consistently lower than many estimates. To compare the perceived prevalence and demographic distributions of MC and UC males, as well as to explore perceptions of STI and sexual health measures. Random digit dial telephone interviews of nationally representative U.S. samples of 1,239 MC and 1,213 UC males aged 15-19 years were conducted in 2013 by National Opinion Research Center in Chicago. Respondents reported perceived prevalence rates for MC and uncircumcised boys separately by age, gender, race/ethnicity, household income, parental education, parental religious service attendance, and region of the country (Northeast, Midwest, South, and West). The 2009-2014 National Youth Risk Behavior Survey (NYRBS) was used to evaluate perceptions of STI and sexual health measures in general, and MC and UC forms of risky sexual behavior and abstinence. There were some differences in perceived prevalence of MC and UC. No statistical differences were found between perceived MC and UC prevalence rates on weight, fight skills, outgoing, sports, and medication use. There were significant differences by gender (prevalence of MC was higher for females than males) and by race/ethnicity (MC prevalence was higher among all racial/ethnic groups except Latinos, and higher among non-Hispanics than Hispanics). No differences in perceptions of MC and sexual health were found by household income and region of the country. Findings of the current study varied from findings among mothers of adolescents, though perceived MC was still lower than perceived MC. The current study provides limited, yet suggestive findings that could help to explore discrepancies between perceived and actual MC rates among adolescents.
