Sex Study Charges Bush Administration With Cover-Up (UPI) — Advocates for the study of Alzheimer's have said that U.S. officials have denied requests to publish the results of research as well as scientific knowledge. A 1989 U.S. government study regarding sex and Alzheimer's disease failed to take into account the fact that men with the illness were more likely to have Alzheimer's in their later years than women with the disease. The study indicated that the cause of Alzheimer's disease is not known, but researchers believe that sex is a factor. "Men with the disease live as long as women with the disease, but they eventually suffer more cognitive and behavioral symptoms," he added. "The study was never published in any scientific journal. It was suppressed, and HHS officials lied and claimed they hadn't been given the information in time," said Jackie Mandeville, head of the Alzheimer's Association. "The government and the Bush administration have been denying Alzheimer's research is harmful to their interests. How did they see a link between Alzheimer's and 'social ills,' and how are they going to spin this?" asked scientist and environmental activist Michael J.
