Roleplaying Game The year is 2161, and the world has been invaded by gigantic beasts known as the Hehilsenans. In the midst of the chaos, a group of Human refugees made it to the desert island of Biak in the Western Pacific, which was designated as safe haven from the Hehilsenans. However, the peaceful refugees were quickly caught in battle between the Human and Hehilsenans forces, and had to run for their lives. Much of the survivors were captured, and taken into the facility of Biak Island. For the last five years, they have done everything they could to save the remaining up to ten thousand refugees, but they were oblivious to events happening outside the island. Now that the Hehilsenans' threat is even worse than before, the last hope of the refugees fell into the hands of the refugees a few years earlier as the Hehilsenans' forces were all occupied in the West whilst most of the Human intelligence agencies were busy dealing with multiple threats from the East. A private military company called the Mahiran Company was hired to collect information from the mainland, and to fend off any attacks from within, and also to rescue the refugees captured by the Hehilsenans or the monsters. After they found a Karamati, they decided to capture the Krakuan Cult and send their god in exchange for the technological secrets of the Karamatis. The company head enlisted Dr. Kim to do the sacrifice, but after bringing the god down with his scientific know-how, his body was stolen by the Hehilsenans, and he was killed by them. With only a few days left, the humans have to find more information from the mainland. The only person who knows more than anyone else besides Dr. Kim is the head of the Mahiran Company himself, a mysterious man who revealed himself to be the former soldier Gun and his partner Azas. At first, the refugees refused Gun's help and tried to stop their escape into the dangerous land of Karamati, however, three of the people of the crew went north with Gun's partner Azas, as Gun didn't want to lose his friends. Now, they are all trapped in the middle of the island in the ancient ruins on the top. Just when it seems that it's a time for total despair, things get complicated when Azas reveals that there is a second force rescuing the refugees with the help of Gun, but they're on
