Superoxide production in human granulocytes was inhibited following preincubation of the cells with p22(phox) antibodies or GPx7/p22(phox) cDNA in both the presence and absence of cytosolic factors. In contrast, preincubation with anti-GPx1/p22(phox) antibodies had no effect on superoxide production in these conditions. This finding implicates, at least in human granulocytes, a function for p22(phox) other than in the generation of superoxide from oxygen.Q: Are these the same bitmap? Firefox.Q: defining a list of vectors I know defining a list of vectors has nothing to do with Mathematica and does not have to do with anything in the language. However I wanted to present a function that expands a list of vectors to any size. I think this is what I want, and to make sure I defined it right, I just want to know if this function is called an established name with a special meaning. myFunction[list_, vector_] := FoldList[(#[[1]] -> #[[2]]) &, #[[1]], vector] & /@ list This is what I think what I want, and am not sure how it is called. A: The function I described is an Application. It is made of 2 parts. First part is a function FoldList. First of all, it is defined inside. The second part is that we want a function applied to a pair of list and a list element. As in the docs, the third argument is the function and the second argument is the list element. The method {function, $arg1, $arg2,...} is called Part. By the way, FoldList

PEGylated liposomes, proposed as alternative formulations for polycationic vesicles, are subjected to freeze-drying. It has been shown that the characteristics of PEGylated liposomes are retained during freeze-drying. The stability of pegylated liposomes prepared using different lipid compositions as well as the effect of PEG covalent substitution levels on the stability of liposomes subjected to freeze-drying have been investigated. Freezing and drying of liposome dispersions can be regarded as a process of phase separation in the presence of a glassy matrix. The phase separated material at the freezing and the frozen-dry state could be characterized by differential scanning calorimetry. The freeze-drying process itself was monitored by dynamic light scattering and photon correlation spectroscopy. DSC analysis showed a gradual freezing of the PEGylated lipids in the absence of a separate phase of PEGylated lipids. The PEGylated lipids then diffuse slowly to the outer ice surface. Because of very low melting enthalpy of the lipids used in the present study, these lipids have a high diffusion coefficient. The PEGylated lipids stay close to the surface of the matrix during the freeze-drying process.
