A: According to the documentation for paste(), paste0() drops the last argument, but its parenthesis were not printed correctly as you noticed in the answer. The way I'll see this is that you need to perform printing of the parenthesis manually.

library(magrittr)
dat %>% mutate(messages = paste0("elemento = ", elemento, " "; ")) %>% mutate(messages2 = paste0("elemento = ", elemento, " "; mes = " ", mes, " "; ")) %>% filter(messages!= messages2)

Q: Spring MVC - Hibernate Exception I have a simple Spring MVC web application where I have all required jars (spring, hibernate, postgresql, tomcat etc) from same repository. When I run my application on tomcat I get an "org.hibernate.MappingException: Could not determine type for: java.util.List" exception When I remove hibernate-3.1 jar from the library it works fine. My pom.xml is here: org.hibernate hibernate-core 3.2.2.Final I have used this tutorial for setting up my project. Thanks in advance

A: That's very peculiar. One thing is sure, it should not be a classpath issue: the exception should not be raised (cannot determine the type of the List) if you're using the same version of hibernate as you wrote in your pom. Have you tried compiling from source? I don't know if this will help, but you should look at whether you've missed any

Q: Using C# to extract text from a string, then insert as a variable name in ASP.NET with C# and CSV-backed database, how can I take a string that contains a filename with a space in it, and have it split on the space such that I can call all of the variables inside of that list? eg: string csv = "c:\users\user\Desktop\Example.csv"; ... string[] split = csv.Split(new[] { " " }, StringSplitOptions.None); string foreachVariable = ""; for (int counter = 0; counter < split.Length; counter++)
