The purpose of this study was to determine the most appropriate laboratory and clinical criteria for the diagnosis of acute deep vein thrombosis (DVT). A patient was considered to have an acute DVT if he had a positive test result and signs or symptoms of DVT with a reference range of duplex ultrasound velocity 1.40-4.00 m/sec. Two hundred and ninety-seven patients with signs and/or symptoms of DVT were enrolled in the study. Of these patients, 19 had pulmonary embolism, 13 had a venous limb phlebogram and 20 had subclavian venography. Only 150 patients had both initial leg ultrasonography and duplex velocimetry. Thirty-two patients were found to have acute DVT (14/19 with pulmonary embolism, 12/13 with venous phlebogram and 6/20 with subclavian venography). Of the 125 patients without acute DVT, 24 were diagnosed as having DVT on the basis of clinical signs and symptoms. Overall, the diagnostic accuracy (89%) of clinical criteria for acute DVT was similar to the diagnostic accuracy (86%) of ultrasonography criteria. The positive predictive value for clinical criteria was 72% and the negative predictive value was 91%. The absence of clinical signs and symptoms in patients with acute pulmonary embolism or no DVT was highly sensitive but resulted in a lower positive predictive value (66%) and a lower negative predictive value (87%). No single clinical criteria was superior to others in achieving a high diagnostic accuracy for the diagnosis of acute DVT.Two scoliosis brace design modalities compared. This study compares two brace design modalities, the temporary plastic and the rigid foam. Both brace modalities have a standard three-point pressure suit, but the plastic cover is custom-fitted. The unbridled comparison in this study is that between the plastic cover

I would like to remove it and then install another version. A: Try this: boot the Ubuntu live CD or USB Start parted and the partitions on your hard drive to delete Ubuntu partition And then install whatever version of Ubuntu you want on the disk space you freed up by removing Ubuntu. Effect of various types of particle suspensions on the morphologic and cytologic features of tracheal and bronchial epithelial cells: experimental and computed tomographic findings. To evaluate the safety of inhaled particles, the authors designed an experiment to study the morphologic and cytologic changes in the respiratory epithelium caused by various particle suspensions. The particles used were high-strength steel, glass, two types of aluminum, and a polyethylene aerosol. Twenty-four rabbits were exposed for 6 months to these particulate suspensions at 3 mg/m³. Fifteen rabbits served as nonexposed control animals. After the end of exposure, the rabbits were killed, and the tracheobronchial segments were examined histologically. In addition, the authors used a computed tomography scanner to examine the lungs after the exposure. The high-strength steel, glass, aluminum particles, and the polyethylene aerosol had a strong inflammatory effect on the tracheobronchial epithelium, causing a decrease in the height of the cells. After 7 days, the loss of epithelial cells was over, and the cells became hypertrophic. No signs of degeneration or carcinogenesis were seen.

The computed tomographic examination revealed that all the neoplasms had a benign appearance. The glass, aluminum, and polyethylene aerosol particles caused serious inflammatory effects on the tracheobronchial epithelium. This alteration is followed by a recovery within 7 days. The high-strength steel particles caused a loss of epithelial cells, followed by degeneration, and the formation of a carcinoma in situ. The findings provide information useful for designing and conducting occupational hygiene studies. The present invention relates to a new and distinct cultivar of Asiatic hybrid grass, hereinafter referred to by the
