Analyst: Bitcoin Is Over Bitcoin has lost over 60% of its value in 2018, and research from digital currency analyst Willy Woo suggests that it is a bubble that has just begun to pop. Also read: Japanese FSA Approves Regulation for Crypto Margin Trading Bitcoin Is Over "I don't think anyone should be driving too hard to try to time the market," Willy Woo, the founder of derivatives analytics firm Gnosis, told CNBC. The analyst added that there had been overinflation in crypto, which is a market that is "heavily influenced by the FOMO" - fear of missing out - and when it comes to the price of a cryptocurrency, the market tends to correlate with the "fear of no FOMO." "It's like the stock market," he explained. "The stock market also correlates, [but] it's important to remember that what causes prices is demand and supply. In the short term, we often see the market have this very high correlation." "It's Over" According to Woo, the current correction in the cryptocurrency market is due to the fact that "all the big whales in the space are attacking it," after realizing that it is "overvalued." The analyst went on to explain that if a person was not as well capitalized as those who were "shorting" - or betting that prices would go down - they would lose money when the losses started to accumulate. Because the whales
