The National Basketball Association has endorsed a Minnesota program to allow the distribution of same-day licenses for firearms, even for people who may be ineligible to possess them, according to a letter obtained by the Star Tribune. The program is highly contentious in Minnesota, where the vast majority of the state's suburban counties have passed laws prohibiting weapons in the parking lots of sports arenas. The letter is part of a package of documents being prepared by the NBA and Minnesota for the state attorney general's office as part of an ongoing legal case, with a trial set to begin Monday in Ramsey County District Court. It outlines a league-wide effort to advocate for the practice nationwide. In the letter, the NBA's executive vice president and chief legal counsel, Toni Lynne DiLullo, indicated that the league supported the main objectives of the new Minnesota Firearms Safety Assistance Program. The program, set to begin Friday, would require sellers to complete enhanced criminal background checks and to verify the identity and status of prospective customers. It would also require sellers to issue a firearm safety certificate on the spot, while simultaneously providing customers with a form for forwarding that certificate to a gun dealer who could issue the license. "This program could result in a new license being issued to the consumer in Minnesota the same day," DiLullo wrote. "This could ensure that the consumer has the opportunity to acquire a license without delay or need for additional, time-consuming checks with a licensee or law enforcement." The fee for the license would be $20.75 for handguns, $49.75 for rifles and $89.75 for long guns. "The NBA believes that more ease in purchasing a firearm should benefit everyone, especially law-abiding gun owners such as the NBA and its players," DiLullo wrote. The NBA did not return a call for comment Friday morning. President Donald Trump and the National Rifle

Association have taken a vocal stance in support of the program, even after the Minnesota attorney general's office filed an amicus brief in the case opposing it. The attorney general, Lori Swanson, said Friday that the NBA's endorsement "represents another example of the NRA stoking fear over Second Amendment rights

I have frequently heard my mother say "it is very easy", referring to easy things, almost as if she is trying to use the word "very" in this way. As far as I know, you cannot use the word "very" on its own to indicate a comparison of magnitude, and "it is easy" does not sound wrong to me. But in these situations, can I still understand her? Could she say "it is easy" in this context? A: This usage of "very" can be similar to "very large". You say: It is very hard, very easy, or very easy but hard. If you are giving a compliment, you could say: It is very easy. or It is a very easy task. A: As a native English
