Along with the shapes, the size of the triangles, was also measured. The results reveal that the proportion of space occupied by the triangles decreases with the size of the cells. In addition, it is possible to observe that cells with more triangles per square centimeter are also bigger and those that have more triangles at the beginning of the tomb tend to become bigger in later periods. This phenomenon could be related to another kind of factor. The space in the tomb must be proportioned in order to facilitate the enclosure of the various objects inside. This finding should be further investigated by observing the tomb under the microscope with micromorphological methods, since some of the anatomical terms previously proposed by Bourrié may not be related directly to
