In a mouse model for SLE (nf-s-s), the self-reactive antibody, Abs, can cross-react with molecules on normal renal epithelial cells. The pathogenic self-reactive Abs have been found to be of the IgG and IgM classes. Disease induction can be monitored by passive transfer of Ab plus complement. Passive transfer was delayed by treatment with the immunosuppressant azathioprine. These studies show the self-reactive Ab response in SLE can be modified by treatment with an immunosuppressant. Anomalies of the vasculature in the orbit and cranial region. Anomalies of the orbital vasculature are very uncommon. We report two cases of orbital hemangioma and intracranial aneurysms of traumatic origin. Both cases presented with a mass at the base of the skull and periorbital edema. Complete resection of the intracranial aneurysms was performed. One patient also underwent resection of an intramaxillary cheek hemangioma. Intraoperative findings demonstrated invasion of the tumor into the orbit in both cases. Aneurysms can be difficult to diagnose if they are very small. This report describes surgical treatment of an unusual case of intracranial aneurysms with the purpose of improving preoperative diagnosis. The SIRC Almanac: Green Eggs and Craft Beer 1.
