The two have worked together previously on "The Walking Dead," playing the same character, the good guy Glenn. For the actor, a role in a show based on a true story could be just the thing to fill his creative well. "I love character pieces and telling true stories, and they're the most intimidating ones to do because you have to make them as real as possible, as authentic as possible," says Bernthal. "You have to tell it in a way that's really true. There's a lot of honor in that, and I've always thought of it as pretty intimidating. I'm not one who likes to make movies, I like to make TV, but I know there's an obligation to tell stories that aren't ordinarily told on TV." A-list names such as Bernthal and Ryan Reynolds and Justin Timberlake are already attached to "Straight Up," a biopic centering on an assassin who uses his past history of violence and instability to help himself. "Straight Up" is not yet set up at a network, but if it gets picked up to series, it would
