Beyond the visible: detecting and quantifying dynamic features in the retina. The neural computations performed by the retina are limited to a small patch of visual space that contains only a small number of task-relevant features, such as edge orientations or line segments. We review this neural limitation in the context of a more general framework of how dynamic features in the environment are interpreted and represented by the brain. We also discuss how recent studies of single neuron responses in the retina and early visual cortex are challenging the idea that the brain always combines simple features (e.g., edges) in a pairwise fashion. Rather, as the brain is capable of integrating the responses of multiple neurons that encode the same feature (e.g., contrast), various approaches suggest that the overall retinal responses carry more and more information about features as the stimulus is changed from static to dynamic.

Q: How to use PHP for handling more than one form submission

my program, I need to have more than one php form. The first one is a quick form that resets the form fields and then submits the form, and I also have to have a form that lets the user send me a message. What I tried is to have a form, then another one, then when user clicks on the submit button, the first form would be sent to the database, and then the second form. I am having trouble with this though, when I try to submit the first form it seems to be not working, and then I thought I would have the second form submit to the same page again, but I need the name of the form in the url. Is there another way to do it? A: You should probably do this using a AJAX API. 'Stranger Things 2' promo: Will the boys ever get their things together? The 'Stranger Things' hype machine is still going strong! After a teaser for the official return of the series and the release of new artwork for the upcoming season, Netflix posted a new clip from the upcoming season. The short clip shows an eerie scene in the Hawkins National Laboratory, and the boy's band clarinet just got some new friends! The new clip is just the first of several promotions for 'Stranger Things 2.' The streaming service also released the first trailer for the season. The second clip is a full-length version of the first, which gives us a closer look at the boys in the Upside Down. We'll also get to see more on the mother's necklace, which is now carrying a little weight. Check out the new trailer for 'Stranger Things 2' and the new clip from
