Divergent regulations in China and the UK for importing prepubertal male pigs from the EU member states. China and the United Kingdom (UK) have signed a scientific agreement on import and export of fresh pork products. In the agreement, China has agreed to allow the import of pork which is at least three months old at the time of inspection. However, due to different permit regulations, a significant amount of immature male pigs have been reported to be traded with both countries. To better understand the difference between the two countries, we surveyed and surveyed the UK in June 2008, providing 70% response rate. The results showed that most interviewed traders sell the pigs to consumers or brokers for slaughter. The age of the pigs usually ranged from six to eight weeks, and most pigs were smuggled into China from Canada and the Netherlands. Generally, traders in China did not consider the type of trading market (raw or processed) when determining the age of the pigs. However, consumers in the UK did consider the commercial market, which may lead to the premature export of immature pigs. By comparing the datasets from the two countries, we found that the different permit regulations in the two countries cause the significantly different age profiles of pigs imported, which can be interpreted as differences in the maturity status in the two countries.
