How to use an Infrared Camera As a Marijuana Detector? An Infrared Camera can be a very useful tool for marijuana growers. This device is perfect for detecting Cannabis (mari juana) in the early stages of growth. It is also used to locate the roots of your plants to keep them healthy and all around. Let's see how to use a camera. The camera you need The first thing you need to get a camera is a lens. You need a camera with a lens with a distance of about 20 to 30 meters. The lens is like the eye of the camera, so it must be focused on the plant itself to be able to get the best results. Also, you should test the lens to make sure it is properly focused. Since the camera must capture an image of the plant, it is important that you keep the light out. You want to keep it dim enough so that you can keep your camera dark while still keeping the light on the plant or its leaves. Your camera can be connected to a computer via USB or an SD card. Even though you can take pictures with a digital camera, it is best to get a standalone camera because the SD card can get filled up quickly. You can store your images on your computer and back them up. The setup For the setup of your Infrared Camera, you need to place it on a tripod. Make sure it is securely fastened. You can put a polarizing filter on your lens if you want to get rid of the 595f342e71
