So, the problem is that `indexOf` returns `-1` if the character found is not actually in the string, but it was found at a location that was in the string. To solve this, we don't need to use `indexOf` at all - we can just do a simple `substr`: if `(my_file.has_content?(my_string) && my_file.strip.substr(0..3) == my_string)` # do something end As written, this will be a little bit slow, because it has to read the entire string, compare it to every character, then remove the first three characters. So, the `indexOf` version would be faster: `my_file = File.open("my_file.txt", "r") my_string = my_file.read.chomp my_file = File.new("my_file_out.txt", "w") my_file.puts my_string my_file.each_char do |character| if my_file.has_content?(my_string) && my_file.strip.substr(0..3) == my_string # do something end end A: @DonMullins and @ThorbjørnRavn answered almost identically on their questions, so I accepted an answer that earned the most upvotes. In my opinion, the easiest way to to fix this is: my_file.each_char do |character| if my_file.has_content?(my_string) && my_file.strip.substr(0..3) == my_string # do something end end`
